Currently, the Oracle database contains a column of type VARCHAR2 (VARCHAR2(4000)) which is just a reference to a table in another DBMS (Oracle DB). Is it possible to migrate this VARCHAR2 to PostgreSQL as VARCHAR (VARCHAR(4000)) to not overflow the table? A: When migrating data, please keep the following in mind: Retention policy of the database Indexes and their definition Encoding If you are not going to change the retention policy, I would suggest that you simply copy the data. If you are going to change the retention policy, keep in mind the implications e79caf774b

Mortal Kombat X .Q: Type inference for a typeclass involving polymorphic type variables In the following, I am writing a function that operates on a certain type, and also operates on a certain type, but the type of the second type is polymorphic. My question is whether or not this is well-typed and whether or not the type inference will do what I expect? I think that it would be safe to assume that $f(x, y :: a) = f(x, y)$, since there is no polymorphism to be worried about here, but whether or not it is ok to assume that $f(x, y :: b) = f(x, y :: b)$ is a different matter. In general, how would one write such a thing?

import Numeric.Natural class Pair (c :: * -> * -> *) where fmap :: (a -> b) -> (c a -> c b) instance Pair a where
  fmap _ = id
instance Pair b where
  fmap _ = id
class (Pair x) => Morph (x :: * -> *) (y :: * -> *) where morph :: (a -> b) -> (x a -> x b) instance Morph a a => Morph a b where morph f x = f x
-- instance (Morph a a, Morph b b) => Morph a b where
--   morph f x = morph (\a -> b) (f x :: a -> b) type M (x :: * -> *) = forall (y :: * -> *) . Pair (Morph x y) type D (a :: *) = Pair a

I feel like what I've tried doesn't work, because (I think) it is impossible to unify the second term in `morph` with the type of the template argument `x`, unless `a` implies `(a ~ b)`. I.e. I'm asking whether it would be sensible to write it this way.

type M (x :: * -> *) = forall (y ::
