from January 2011 to March 2012, with the number of projects totaling more than 3.8 million. A record number of the North American buildings added to the AIA's 2011 database were built using AutoCAD and its related software applications. More than one in five (21%) of the people who use AutoCAD work for an architecture firm, while the remaining are architects, engineers, and design professionals. The types of buildings that architects and engineers use AutoCAD to design include:

- Houses (including condos)
- Industrial buildings
- Educational facilities
- Health care facilities
- Museums
- Cultural centers
- Retail stores
- Office buildings
- Recreational facilities

Houses

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, in 2010, 64% of the U.S. population lived in single-family homes. However, less than half of all new single-family homes are built from scratch, with the majority being built from modular components that are trucked in from a factory. Currently, architects use these prefabricated components as a means of cost saving and streamlining the design process. In many cases, architects use CAD programs to "cage" or "paper-model" a house prior to the actual construction. Once the prefabricated components are delivered, architects assemble the house. To use AutoCAD and related software applications, architects need a host computer, monitor, keyboard, mouse, and stylus. Some architects may also need a printer, a graphics tablet (GPS, DAS), and a digitizer tablet (the latter being necessary if the architect uses AutoCAD to create 2D or 3D drawings). The typical host computer required by architects is a Dell computer running Windows or Linux. Architectural firms can choose from a variety of CAD

Other programs Other CAD programs are also offered by Autodesk, such as Revit Architecture, Maya 3D Modeling, Animate, ArcGIS, Inventor, Alias Wavefront 3D, Maxon Cinema 4D, Filmmaker, Motion Builder, Truespace, AutoCAD Map 3D, Houdini, Architectural Design, Blender, SketchUp, and SketchUp Pro. AutoCAD LT, a free (for non-commercial use) alternative to AutoCAD, is available from their website. Some of the features in Autodesk's other CAD programs not found in AutoCAD are: Nested components Support for non-standard input formats (e.g., HTML) Aspect ratios Dynamic components that display contents from other drawings or workspaces Custom Layers, which make it possible to define additional information about a drawing. Raster Data Exchange Support for the Veejay 2 file format (a format used by Autodesk's 3D Design Suite) Since 2017, Autodesk also offers AutoCAD LT for Microsoft Windows, a free software alternative to Autodesk AutoCAD LT, which is a free version of Autodesk's AutoCAD LT.

Academic In addition to the licensing programs, Autodesk offers academic licenses for students and universities in the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, and Australia. These licenses enable students and faculty to use the software for academic use only.

Students and faculty are granted a "grant-limited license" at a reduced price. Faculty and students must have a valid e-mail address and valid e-mail address may only be used for that particular license. Some universities use the academic licenses to perform simulations and other activities for academic credit, thereby teaching students to use computer-aided design. The University of Texas at Austin uses AutoCAD for engineering simulations and worksheets. Mobile apps There are many applications for iOS and Android devices such as the Autodesk 360 Mobile App that was released in September 2014. Families Aside from the usual features of Autodesk software, Autodesk's families also include products intended for use by families and small businesses. These products are typically targeted at CAD enthusiasts, hobbyists, and first-time users. The Autodesk Exchange Apps store has a large number of Apps that are available free of charge. ca3bfb1094
