Try them and leave your feedback at vitro movement of fetal rat teeth. We demonstrate that, in vitro, cervical loop and root trochlear fossae of rodent incisors are oriented in an up-down direction in relation to the long axis of the tooth. Also, the mesiodistal extent of the interproximal alveolar spaces is congruent with the mesiodistal extent of the tooth roots. Furthermore, in the rat, the cervical loop of the first lower incisor is not open, nor is it located on the labial side of the tooth root. The hypothesis that the mesiodistal extension of rodent incisors and canines is due to an initial up-down (root trochlear fossa) movement of the dental arches which is followed by a mesiodistal tilt and mesiolingual extension of the crown is discussed. class="md-footer-nav__link md-nav__icon md-nav__href md-nav__toggle" href="javascript:;> 6d1f23a050
