The Trust's work for Norfolk farmers and producers is led by Matthew Wright, Associate Director of Agri-Food and Horticulture, who has experience of working in the offshore oil and gas sector. Mr Wright said: "The Trust is pleased to be working with Norfolk's farming and rural industries and communities. We look forward to their insight and input as we plan for the future of our programme." A spokesperson for the Trust said: "There are benefits to Norfolk in working with the Trust's programme. For example, Smith & Baxter's, which has many of its farms in Norfolk, has a strong commitment to looking after its soil health." Venn diagram showing similar properties of the investment points Source: Natural Resources Canada The recent S&P 500 value of $8000 USD could not be sustained for more than one trading day. If you buy the stock market at that price, you make the maximum possible gain; otherwise you lose all your initial investment. It is very easy to understand this concept but if you don't have a calculator it could be difficult to prove the concept. So, here is a demonstration: The following graph is a log scale, to demonstrate that the winning investments (which we can define as those investments that are the largest in volume) are clearly visible. For example the S&P 500 index was trading at $8,200 at the end of January 2018. It peaked at $8,800 before declining to $8,200 over the next two days. It is important to note that it is one of the slowest markets in its price history. The graph shows just six 6d1f23a050
